An original anthology celebrating Rod Serling's landmark television series When it first aired in 1959, The Twilight Zone was nothing less than groundbreaking television. Freed from much of the censors' strict oversight because of the show's classification as science fiction, the 156 filmed episodes explored powerful and moving human themes--love, hate, pride, jealousy, terror--in their own unique style. The show has since inspired two revivals, as well as fiction, comic books, and magazines ...

Series history. After the original Twilight Zone series ended in 1964, Rod Serling sold the rights to the series to CBS, which allowed for a revival of the show by the network. As an in-house production, they stood to earn more money producing The Twilight Zone than they could by purchasing a new series produced by an outside company. Even so, the network was slow to consider a revival ...

Many of the Twilight Zone episodes were original stories adapted for screenplay. This book contains 30 of the original stories, and they're even better than the show. Some were a bit predictable, some I already knew the ending because I'd seen the episode, and others completely threw me off with the plot.

The phrase "twilight zone," inspired by the series, is used to describe surreal experiences. The series featured both established stars and younger actors who would become much better known later. Serling served as executive producer and head writer; he wrote or co-wrote 92 of the show's 156 episodes.

My favourite stories include, Genesis by David Hagberg, which actually situates the Twilight Zone itself within The Twilight Zone, if that makes sense, its a great story, The Art of the Miniature by Earl Hamner, which of all the stories I felt read most like a classic episode of The Twilight Zone (or proposal/plan for one at least) and The Wrong Room by R. L. Stine but really just because I thought this was a good R. L. Stine story.
